

Racial and social justice statement.

Throughout its long history, The Buhl Foundation has taken a fair and equitable approach to grantmaking and has sought to ensure that its grantees are reflective of the community and the population that it serves. As such, by leveraging its resources, The Buhl Foundation has always strived to elevate the voices of marginalized individuals, organizations, and communities and to address historic and structural barriers to innovation.

As a funder, convener, and thought leader, The Buhl Foundation continues to search for ways to facilitate and promote racial and social justice and, thus, continue to realize the vision of its benefactor that transformational ideas be developed and that positive change be enacted. And, through its work with community residents, partners, and key stakeholders, The Buhl Foundation continues to seek and implement ways in which racism and other forms of structural inequity can be meaningfully dismantled.

It is only when the community is strong and operates for the common good that people and organizations can dream, innovate, and take action in a rapidly changing world.
